James A Clark, a printer, shot his father-in-law, Eli Hart, aged 65 years, at 9:30 o'clock last night, in Washington. The affair occurred in front of the father's confectionery store, 2153 Pensylvania avenue. Hart was on his way home, and when near Twentieth street and Pennsylvania avenue was met by his son-in-law, and they walked together until the store was reached. Clark, it seems, wanted to go in and sleep there for the night, as he did tho night previous niknown to his father-in-law. Hart positively refused to allow him to enter. A short and angry talk took place between Tragedy in Washington. tively relused to allow him to enter. A short and angry talk took place between the men, and Hart, to get rid of Clark, started to walk away. He had hardstarted to walk away. He had hardly stepped a foot from him when Clark fired five shots at him in rapid succession from a British Bulldeg pistol. One of the shots passed through the coat sleeve and another, which is believed to be fatal, through the right side, coming out through the front of the abdomen. Officers Keese and Hurd, who were on the opposite side of Pennsylvania avenue, ran to the spot and caught Clark as he was about to escape with the smoking pistol in his hand. Two citizens, at the request of the officers, carried the wounded man to Duckett's drug store opposite, where physicians examined the wound and found that interpol hamorrhage hand seet in. They nal hemorrhage had set in. They dressed the wound temporarily, and later the man was removed to Providence Hospital, as they saw at a glance that the wound was necessarily fatal. What gives additional sadness to the act is the fact that Hart's wife has been very ill for some time past, and when told of the shooting she became un-conscious, and lete last night it was stated that she was dving. On Saturday last Clark's wife also became ill, and her father hospital. Hart and his daughter had, by hard work and economy, saved money enough to start a little confectionery business on Pennsylvania avenue. The father worked when he could at his trade as a brickinger, and was sober and industrious. Clark had failed to support his wife, and his father-in-law supported both as long as he could, and until Clark got to ill treating his wife, when Hart interferred. Some time ago Clarke went to Charleston, S. C. and got work, but did not send any money ARDWARE AND COLIDARY
